Rusty Nail Theory Explored in Relation to Lockjaw (Tetanus)

The old idea that a puncture wound from a rusty nail is the cause of tetanus, or lockjaw, is a misconception. Tetanus may develop from almost any scratch or wound, if proper precautions are not taken.

The germ causing tetanus, identified more than 60 years ago, produces one of the most powerful poisons known. It is almost always present in soil contaminated by the body wastes of cattle, horses, and other animals. The germ is thus a menace to children, farmers, gardeners or others whose activities bring them into contact with such soil. However, many tetanus cases develop from injuries incurred elsewhere.

The Clostridium tetani, which causes tetanus, is what is called an anaerobic germ. That means that it thrives in the absence of air. Thus, when it is introduced into tissue so wounded as to close it off from the air, and also is hard to clean, conditions are perfect for its development. A puncture wound from a nail, or the wadding of firecracker, is of that type. That explains the "rusty nail" idea from folklore.

THE GERM does not cause illness by a direct attack on tissue. Instead it produces a toxin, or poison, which has a peculiar liking for nerve tissue. Symptoms are all due to its irritating effect on nerves. Thus there is at first some pain and twitching of muscles due to the nervous stimulation. Then some irritability, restlessness, and chills. Then muscles begin to develop violent involuntary convulsions.

If the nerves controlling muscles of the jaw are affected their contraction clamps the jaws tightly closed. Hence the term lockjaw. As the toxin extends its effects, major trunk muscles are involved and the back muscles in convulsion may pull the spine into a curve so that only head and feet touch the bed. The pain is excruciating. Meanwhile, however, the mind remains clear. Death is due, not to the poison directly, but to exhaustion, heart failure, or suffocation caused by spasm of the throat muscles. In untreated cases, it comes within about four days, but, if the patient can be carried through the 10th day, there is about a 50 per cent chance of recovery.

WITH THE discovery of tetanus toxoid in 1924, tetanus became a preventable disease. Children regularly under the care of a physician are given immunization doses, along with their preventive inoculations against other diseases such as diphtheria and whooping cough. Every child should have this protection, because the germ may contaminate any wound.

Tetanus may occur any time, but particularly in the summer months, when so many persons are outdoors. Everyone who plans to be working in the soil or around animals should consult the family physician for preventive "shots" of tetanus antitoxin.

If the skin is punctured, see your physician at once. In addition to administering the toxoid, he will open the wound, remove any contamination, and apply antiseptics.

Tetanus is easier to prevent than cure. Everyone should be immunized. Take no chances. (Presented as a public service by the Southwest District of the Los Angeles County Medical Assn.)
